SPIRITS

Spirit. The very word elicits something illicit: Of distillation under cover, of smuggling, and of bootlegging. There is as well, something ethereal about ethanol: the Angel's Share, la Parte des Anges, Spirit.

Every country that can, distills, and each country produces a spirit unique to itself. Why? Because spirits use natural resources better than any other drink. In Scotland, Scotch exists in its current form because Scotland grows barley, has loads of water, and lots of peat instead of coal. In France, Cognac uses grapes (so less need for the plentiful water of Scotland) and particularly, grapes that make pretty neutral wine. In Italy, it's all about leftovers: Grappa reuses the grape crush left after making wine. As a result, Grappa tastes like its grapes. In the Caribbean and South America, sugar cane is the source for all Rum, and in the USA the combination of mineral rich water, corn, wheat, and rye, gives us Bourbons and other whiskies. Tequila would not be the same if it weren't for the rich earth in which the Agave is planted and grown.

And all of this happened seemingly by accident!

Our spirits and after dinner drinks menu takes in the great spirit producing regions of the world and augments them with some stunning fortified options.

Happy sipping!

COGNAC

Must be a minimum of three years old.

Whisky: etym. from the Gaelic 'Uisque Beathe' - Water of Life

SINGLE MALTS

Some countries have a region, Scotch has a whole country. The true expression of Scotland is Single Malt Scotch whisky. Made at a single distillery and only ever from malted barley, these range from light and sweet through rich and powerful: from heather honey to lashings of peat. The world's greatest spirit.
